Monday that no contract had been let case after long and careful consideration, in which each and every juror has many times expressed his convictions; from the evidence and testimons corfus finances are in such favorable in this case, and after arguing for midition that the new pumping unit can many hours, and balleting many times many hours, and balleting many threes, we find that the regult of each ballet is the same, and we do not believe that it would ever be possible for us to render a verdet in this case."

It was signed by C. A. Hirsch, foreman, and also by such of the lurous. The jury was discharged by judge Jackson.

Creen Closes.

After W. H. Burges had concinded the arguments for the defence in the Cacus club trial Saturday, county attorney C. W. Croom closed for the prosecution. Mr. Croom, who had examined all the witnesses in the case, spoke for more than two hours to the jury. He contended that the only difference between the Cacus club and a salion was that athletic ammenment features were not permitted in saloons. He reviewed the findings of the auditors named by the state to check the books of the club and declared that the money received from sales in the buffet slepartment amounted to two-thirds of all the revenues of the organization.

The defence endeavored to show that while the records indicated that the cash taken in from bar sales did runcash taken in from bar the textal vet. Croom Closes.

The defence endeavored to show that while the records indicated that the while the taken in from bar sales did run to a high percentage of the fetal, yet the net profits of the club were only about $1480 last year on all the operations, and that the investment was shown to be $3000.
